INTRODUCTION

OVERVIEW

The CRCC Research Grant Program offers researchers a unique opportunity to obtain support for innovative research that addresses issues specific to the field of rehabilitation counseling. CRCC is particularly interested in funding research that advances the field of rehabilitation counseling and addresses issues important to the field such as professional practice, rehabilitation counselor certification and counselor licensure. Interdisciplinary approaches to addressing these issues are encouraged. In reviewing applications for the CRCC Research Grant, CRCC considers (a) the extent to which the work focuses on timely and relevant questions in an area linked to rehabilitation counseling; (b) the quality of the proposed work, potential impact, and likelihood that the proposed research will be completed according to the proposed timeline, and (c) the extent to which the investigator(s) has drawn on available interdisciplinary expertise in developing and implementing the planned research.

ELIGIBLE APPLICANTS

Applications are encouraged from the full spectrum of rehabilitation counseling professionals and those otherwise qualified to conduct the research as determined by CRCC's Examination and Research Committee. The applicant for the research project must demonstrate the ability and resources to undertake the research project. Established researchers, graduate students, and professionals interested in rehabilitation counseling who have a research structure available are likely successful candidates.
