Rehabilitation counselors who have earned the Certified Rehabilitation Counselor (CRC) designation are uniquely qualified to help individuals with disabilities acclimate to the workplace, and to help employers make a workplace more receptive to individuals with disabilities.

Here's why:

CRCs are the bridges that make disability work in the workplace.

- CRCs ensure the most productive return-to-work based on demonstrated effectiveness - what's known to work.
- CRCs remove barriers to restore functionality.
- CRCs assess the individual and the job; develop the plan; and engineer the solution.

CRCs drive results for you and your company.

- CRCs improve outcomes.
- CRCs increase ROI.
- CRCs improve risk management.
- CRCs help recruit, retain, and retrain.

CRCs are highly skilled and nationally certified specifically to work with individuals with disabilities.

- CRCs are educated and trained in disability across all types of disabling conditions.
- CRCs are required to stay current through ongoing continuing education.
- The CRC credential is an accredited national certification and considered the gold standard in rehabilitation counseling since 1974.
If you're thinking of hiring a rehabilitation counselor, consider the added value of hiring a Certified Rehabilitation Counselor - a CRC - to your professional team.

To read more, click here to access CRCs and Disability: Driving Results for You and Your Company.