As a CRC who provides support for students with disabilities, you have a unique opportunity to advocate for the CRC certification within the Disability Support Services community.

By becoming a member of the Association on Higher Education and Disability (AHEAD), the only national organization for Disability Support Services (DSS) professionals, you can lend your support to promote the value CRCs bring to colleges and universities and to students with disabilities.

Join more than 2,800 active members who support the organization's mission to advance equity in higher education for people with disabilities. To learn more about AHEAD, click here.

Why All DSS Professionals Should Earn CRC Certification
CRCs are highly skilled and nationally certified to help students with disabilities acclimate to a campus environment, to help administrators make college and university campuses more receptive to students with disabilities, and to assist colleges and universities mitigate risk factors. Plus:

- CRCs are educated and trained across all types of disabling conditions.
- CRCs are required to stay current through ongoing continuing education.
- CRCs assess the individual, develop the plan, and engineer the solution.
- CRCs help train staff in disability awareness and diversity strategies.

What's the best way to promote the CRC certification with the DSS community? Join or maintain membership in AHEAD and become active within the organization. To find out why CRCs make a difference, click here.

If you need more information, or to keep us posted on your membership or active participation in AHEAD, email cchapman@crccertification.com.

Sincerely,

Steven West, PhD, CRC
CRCC President-Elect

Cindy A. Chapman, CAE
CRCC Executive Director